1966 Caravelle

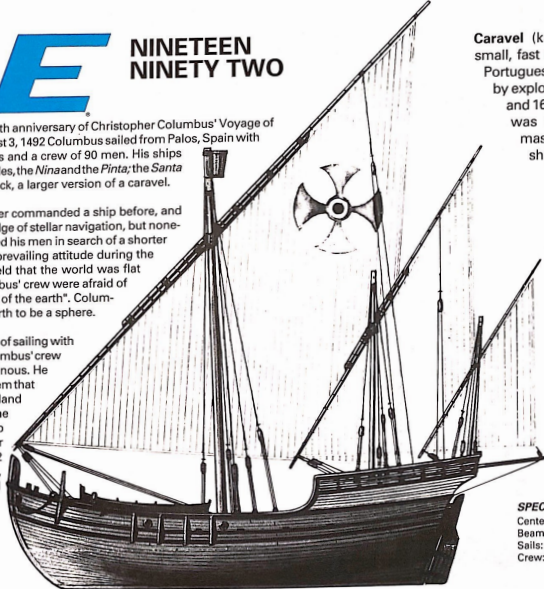

1992 Caravelle

LE NINETEEN NINETY TWO

1992 marks the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' Voyage of discovery. On August 3, 1492 Columbus sailed from Palos, Spain with a fleet of three boats and a crew of 90 men. His ships included two caravelles, the Nina and the Pinta; the Santa Maria being a carrack, a larger version of a caravel.

Columbus had never commanded a ship before, and had limited knowledge of stellar navigation, but nonetheless he bravely led his men in search of a shorter route to India. The prevailing attitude during the Fifteenth century held that the world was flat and many of Columbus' crew were afraid of "falling off the edge of the earth". Columbus believed the Earth to be a sphere.

After several weeks of sailing with no land in sight, Columbus' crew began to grow mutinous. He struck a deal with them that if they did not see land within three days the ships would return to Spain. Two days later on October 12, 1492 an island was sighted, and the New World was discovered.

15th Century Caravel

Caravel (kair'-uh-vel): a small, fast sailing ship of Portuguese design, used by explorers of the 15th and 16th centuries. It was considered a masterpiece of the shipbuilders art.

Layered Hull Design

Legend: HB - Hull Bottom HS - Hull Side D - Deck

A Caravelle boat is strong and durable. Fiberglass, coremat, and gel coat are applied in up to ten layers. Stress points are reinforced with fir, balsa core, or coremat with additional layers of fiberglass to meet your demanding expectations. The stringer system is fir and is bonded to the hull and floor with woven roving to form a durable unit. Both floor and stringer systems are completely encapsulated in fiberglass to ensure long life. Premium grade vinyl fabrics enhance the comfortable interiors and plush marine grade carpet covers the floor entirely. Thru-bolted stainless steel rails and hardware resist the elements and provide added strength.
